Feedback to the speaker

One of the most effective ways to present results in science is giving an oral presentation (e.g. at national or international meetings). Presentation in this class gives you an opportunity to develop effective presentational skills. Feedback to the speaker is a very important aspect of the learning process. Please evaluate presentation of your classmate on this form. This form will be given to the speaker at the end of the semester after all presentations are finished. The identity of the person writing evaluation will not be revealed by design of the multiple choice questions. Simply put a cross in the circle which best reflects the speaker performance in five different categories. Return this form folded in half to the instructor at the end of the class.
